NORMAN HAS SHADE ON PROTO

Jackie Norman of New London, leading the fighting all the way except in the sixth and seventh rounds, had a shade on George Proto of New Haven at the end of their eight-round bout in Olympic hail, on Wednesday evening. Norman fought on his toes every minute of the way and with his deceiving footwork and shift had Proto guessing. Proto, however, in the sixth and seventh rounds let loose and took the two rounds by large margins.

and took the two rounds by large margins.

In the semi-final bout between Ted Russell of Norwich and Kid Bunion of New Haven, the latter being substituted for Mickey Doherty of New Haven, Bunion made Russell look like an amateur, Russell who outweighed his man 20 pounds, was slower on his feet and was unable to get through Bunion's defense at any point in the bout.

Young Raymond, battling against Stakely of the sub base was unintentionally fouled in the second round and was forced to leave the ring owing to his injuries. The bout had the makings of a good go until the unfortunate accident.

The preliminary bout between Miller and Brown, two boys of the subbase, was a tame affair for a fight but a good exhibition of boxing and footwork.

The Main Bout.

In the first round Norman opened the bout with a flash of speed that put Proto on the defensive and kept him continually covering. Norman lea the fighting in this round and landed several times without effectively damaging his man. Proto on the other hand fought hard in the clinches and countered with lefts to the body which Norman effectively stopped. It was Norman's round by a slight margin.

In this round Norman displayed some clever footwork and with his quick shifts tried to draw Proto off his guard, succeeding several times, but was not able to land heavy.

The fifth round was the same as the preceeding rounds, Proto apparently aving himself and not trying to get into the mixup. Norman took this round.

landed a wicked right on Proto's eye and that optic was fast closing when Proto left the ring. It was Norman's round by a good margin.

Taken all in all this bout was one of the cleanest and fastest bouts ever seen here and the two principals so evenly matched that it is hard to give either one a decision sithough Norsether either one a decision, although Norman for his aggressiveness and his greater frequency of landing blows had a slight margin on the New Haven boy.

Bunion Plays With Russell.

Old Doc Bunion, 39, of New Haven, fighting in place of Mickey Doherty of New Haven, against Russell of this city, made the local boy look like a rank amateur. Bunion, if that be his name, showed himself one of the cleverest defensive fighters that has ever been seen in the squared circle in this city. Russell, although working hard, could not land a telling blow on his siender opponent. Bunion apparently foresaw every move that the local lad would make and covered up with ease. In the third round Norman made a good showing crossing his left with his right, landing two hard blows to the head and one to the body. Later in the round Norman with a wicked haymaker landed heavily on Proto's jaw, practically knocking him off his feet. Proto, after this became more cautious until the bell.

The fourth round was fast, both boys landing heavily in the first few seconds and making several misses. In this round Norman displayed some clever footwork and with his quick Stakely and Raymond Bout.

This bout started in a singing contest in the middle of the ring; with Raymond forcing the fight into Stakely's corner. Raymond was a little wild while Stakely showed more sciaving himself and not trying to get to the mixup. Norman took this round.

The sixth round was all Proto's the New Haven boy showing a flash for which he is noted. He landed heavily to the head and body in rapid succession and had Norman playing the defensive until the bell struck.

Again in the seventh Proto showed the same spirit as in the preceeding round and scored several times but without force enough to put his man away. Norman, continually shifting kept well out of reach of the Elm City lad and the blows Proto landed were glancing and without effect.

The final round opened with Norman fighting at top speed and Proto covering. Norman rushed Proto to the ropes but the New Haven boy covered well and escaped harm. About half way through this session Norman referee and Eddie Connelly was an-

It was one by the willinge clock
When he galleped into Lexington.
He saw the gilded weathercock
Swim in the mountight as he passed,
And the meetinghouse windows, blank

Gaze at him with a spectral glare,
As if they aiready stood aghast
At the bloody work they would look
